inflammation and podocyte injury in children with minimal change disease. Glomerular injury in minimal change disease (MCD) in children is characterized by a lack of inflammatory cells in the glomeruli. Therefore, the role of chemokines in the pathogenesis of glomerular injury in MCD is unknown. We investigated the expression of CCL3 in MCD glomeruli and its relevance to disease progression. We measured CCL3 expression in renal biopsy samples of 31 children with steroid-sensitive nephrotic syndrome. Urinary CCL3 levels were significantly higher in children with MCD than in those with FSGS.

Immunohistochemical analyses demonstrated that CCL3 localized to glomeruli and the vasculature in MCD but not in FSGS biopsy samples. CCL3 expression was strongly associated with renal function.

Higher CCL3 expression levels correlated with serum creatinine levels and urinary CCL3 excretion. CCL3 expression was significantly higher in biopsy
